The Adventures of Pirate Nup and Captain Yet:

SCEPTICAL SPECTACLES

"First Mate! Where are my spectacles? Did you move them again?" Pirate Nup glared resentfully at the sleeping lump in the hammock, which was undisturbed by his rant. However, it appeared First Mate did not have his spectacles. "Absolutely useless! Honestly, he is supposed to be helping me organise this ship, but is always napping!" Pirate Nup muttered to himself.

"Squawk!" Becky, First Mate's parrot, screeched from the crow's nest.

"Not now, Becky!" Pirate Nup snapped. Pirate Nup always got into a sour mood when he couldn't do or find something.

As Pirate Nup set out in his search for his beloved spectacles, he heard an excited, "What's poppin', Nuppie?" Pirate Nup's favourite person in the world, Captain Yet, arrived next to his ship, riding on a large, white narwhal. Unfortunately, due to his frustration, Pirate Nup was not in the mood to see Captain Yet at this very moment.

However, Captain Yet asked, "How is your odyssey searching for treasure in the Aegean Sea, Nuppie?"

"Not now, Yettie! I can't find my spectacles anywhere, meaning I can't navigate my ship. What if we crash into an island before I get the chance to call 'land ahoy'? How am I supposed to spot treasure without clear precision?"

Captain Yet climbed off his narwhal and onto the ship's main deck. "You mean you can't find your spectacles ... yet." Pirate Nup rolled his eyes and huffed impatiently. Captain Yet was always telling him that there was a solution for everything. "I am positive your spectacles will turn up, Nuppie. In the meantime, what else could you use to help you navigate your ship?"

Pirate Nup said in a hopeless tone, "Without my spectacles, I can't see anything past the edge of this ship."

Captain Yet looked around thoughtfully, then noticed a mast of an old shipwreck poking through the surface of the sea nearby. "I wonder if ... Nuppie, I'll be right back!" And without hesitation, Captain Yet dove off Pirate Nup's ship and into the sea.

"Squawk!" Becky screeched.

"Not now, Becky!" Pirate Nup yelled impatiently as he looked worriedly at the surface of the sea. Moments later, Captain Yet returned to the surface holding a long, strange, metallic-brass item. Pirate Nup dropped his ladder down to help Captain Yet climb back on board.

"What about this nifty nautical telescope, Nuppie? It will help you see even further than your spectacles."

"I have never used one of those before," Pirate Nup protested.

"... yet!" Captain Yet added. "I can teach you; it's simple. You need to look through the lens and turn the end to make it focus on different objects in the distance."

Pirate Nup cautiously picked up the telescope and attempted to look around. He couldn't believe his eyes. "Wow! I can see so many islands in the distance from here. I can see Poseidon, the god of the sea, harassing some sailors. I can see that First Mate did not wash the top parts of the masts properly. I can see Becky up there in the crow's nest wearing a new pair of spec— Oi! My spectacles!" They both laughed at the ridiculous sight of Becky wearing a pair of large spectacles.

"Well, now we have a variety of items to help you navigate, Nuppie, where are we off to next?" Captain Yet asked.

"I hear there is a lot of treasure to be found in the Mediterranean Sea, but I don't know how to get there!" Pirate Nup said with a puzzled expression.

Captain Yet replied with a cheeky grin, "You mean, Nuppie, you don't know how to get there ... yet."

Pirate Nup grinned back.
